(2002–1916) י”ל

A critical reflection on the origins of American republicanism – Benjamin Franklin's 'Public Works' of 1751.

The initial acts of Franklin, as a political thinker, date back to the period of the American Revolution. Franklin's publications and public works, which he began publishing in 1751, were intended to contribute to the formation of a new society, based on the principles of liberty and democracy.

The publication of Franklin's works was not limited to the United States; they were also distributed in Europe, where they were read by many European intellectuals and politicians. Franklin's ideas on government and politics were widely discussed and debated, and his influence on the development of modern political thought was considerable.

Franklin's works were not only influential in America, but also in Europe. They were widely read and studied by European thinkers and politicians, and they helped to shape the political landscape of the 18th and 19th centuries.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

Franklin's works were not only influential in America, but also in Europe. They were widely read and studied by European thinkers and politicians, and they helped to shape the political landscape of the 18th and 19th centuries.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.

In his works, Franklin argued for the importance of individual liberty and the need for a strong, but accountable government. He believed that the government should be accountable to the people, and that it should be responsive to their needs and desires.
Roma nil a me alienum puto

humani